

There’s Nothing Great About This ‘Reset’

By James Liggett

As most remain stupefied by rising infection rates, fixate on the daily ‘R number’ or argue the virtues of mask wearing, those who seek to impose their technocratic will, and tighten their vice grip upon the Earth, aren’t hiding anything.

Catalysed by a multi-billion dollar campaign of virus fear and disinformation, infecting minds from Wuhan to Washington, the World Economic Forum’s (WEF’s) ‘Great Reset’ of capitalism is a sophisticated plot to transfer all the remaining wealth and power from the people up to the financial classes. The WEF has been gaining power and influence on the international stage in recent years and seems to have been chosen as the driving force behind the agenda. It presents a future of increased globalization, the imposition of a totalitarian framework of bio-secure control and hints at a transhumanist future that challenges the very essence of what it means to be human.

But what is this Great Reset? Well, if you took the flowery descriptions on the forum’s website at face value and mindlessly absorb the slick messages peppering advertising billboards all over the country, you would be forgiven for thinking this is a heroically ambitious rescue plan designed to overcome the mammoth Covid (and climate) disruptions to our social, political and economic systems. An entirely necessary response, demanding the cooperation of international ‘stakeholders’ to combat the unprecedented challenges we face.

Or as the big budget promo video — which blends depressing themes of Covid-19, ‘climate change’, social justice and pollution destruction, loudly declares:

*Our World has changed,
Our challenges are greater,
Our fragilities exposed,
Our systems need a reset,
Everyone has a role to play,
The Great Reset,
Join us.*

Marketing spin aside, dig below the surface and you’ll soon unearth some bright red flags. To begin with, the whole premise of this internationally transformative push being an unexpected — but necessary — reaction to an unforeseen threat is disingenuous at best.

On the WEF’s website is a complicated ‘transformation map,’ depicting and connecting a myriad of sectors, services and behaviours, interlinked with how they will fuse with the response to the Covid-19 ‘crisis.’ Yet this sophisticated diagram had in fact already been published in 2017. Now updated to include Covid-19 — the catalyst that created a smoke-screen of panic to drive home and fast-track multiple long-held strategies to fulfill this agenda.

The WEF and billionaire elitist cronies have set out an ambitious and open conspiracy to transform permanently every aspect of what we do — from food to finance and from travel to taxes. It wants to dictate to us how we will live, work and interact in the future. And under the guise of the connected, 5G-driven ‘Fourth Industrial Revolution’ (4IR) they even plan to transform the very essence of what it means to be human.

While the word ‘reset’ is typically used to describe a return to an earlier way of doing things, it would actually be more honest if its proponents had coined their plans ‘The Great Transformation.’

In an introductory speech in June of this year, Klaus Schwab, founder and Executive Chairman of the WEF states that the ‘global pandemic’ has created challenges not faced since WWII, which he claims have demonstrated that our ‘old and outdated’ systems are unfit for the 21st century.

In his amusingly thick German accent he calls upon the world to seize this opportunity. Not only in fighting Covid, but also in ‘reshaping the entire international system, and building a new social contract, for the post corona era.’ Throwing in a raft of buzzwords, including ‘sustainability, resilience, equality and inclusivity,’ the billionaire manages to say a whole lot of nothing, while assuring us that his ‘Great Reset’ will enable the world to ‘Build Back Better.’ By radically altering our behaviours, harmonising with nature and integrating 4IR technologies, it is his promise that ‘better lives’ will be created.

The 4IR component is perhaps the most alarming aspect of the plan for its sheer science-fiction audacity.

Once again, it’s through the words of Schwab himself that we gain the best insight. His previous book of the same name is littered from cover to cover with his transhumanist ideals. He salivates over the potential of the emerging tech to blend man with machine,

Warning From A Retired O.P.P. Officer

By Vincent Gircys

For 32 years my challenging and confrontational career as a police officer provided investigative opportunity and insight into human conflict. A day doesn't go by without an opportunity to listen to both sides of a conflict void of bias before reaching a decision and taking the appropriate enforcement action if required.

As my career advanced I was eventually invited into the realm of Forensic Investigations. I progressed to the higher levels of Forensic Reconstruction, became an expert witness for the crown on numerous occasions and travelled across the Province of Ontario training other forensic investigators. The simplicity of math is how crime scene numerical values tell the factual story. The data was either consistent with witness accounts or it revealed the witness was mistaken or deceitful, it never lied. The length of the skid marks and the friction coefficient of the road surface revealed the speed. Physical evidence doesn't lie. It requires interpretation by a skilled investigator, and based on the laws of physics, reveals itself.

It's not that difficult a task, you just need the desire to understand and the training to know what you're looking for.

Years after retirement with my brain still in analytical mode, the fear porn of a novel virus descended upon the world. Initially we take shelter and wait it out. The never ending news cycle of new cases and death rates doesn't correspond with the Tic Tok videos of empty hospitals (my closest friends in health-care sit in empty hospitals waiting to flatten a nothing burger). Taking a break from the mainstream news cycle I resort to a simple mathematics assignment to check the data myself.

Starting with Polymerase Chain Reaction I find overwhelming data from multiple peer reviewed studies that current testing has a 50-95% error rate. The case counts are increasing rapidly as testing increases. Am I hearing this correctly? A test that was never designed for virus recognition indicates highly inaccurate false positive results and the testing rate is ramped up to perpetually increase even higher false positive results? Those false results are then used to lock down the population and override the fundamental charter and human rights. That's not the worst part, the majority of Canadians have fallen for the hoax.

Total Deaths January to September Note: From Stats Canada
2018 = 186,825	2019 = 185,200	2020 = 186,690

Yet this is being promoted as a deadly pandemic? I'm no stranger to how powerful a motivating factor fear is. In my case it kept me alive and moving at the worst of times. Today, we have Canadians fearful of something no bigger than the annual flu which targets the elderly with comorbidities. There is no doubt that this target group has been neglected to a level of "Crimes against Humanity". Locked down in solitary confinement for months left to die in loneliness. Our most precious and valued left behind intentionally by the catastrophic decisions our political leaders have made. The elderly with comorbidities deserve every resource available as they are the exclusive targets. That fear, brought to you by Mainstream Media and Big Tech giants has programmed the human mind to void all humanity and behave in ways never seen before.

I still believe our current men and women of law enforcement are among the bravest souls I have had the pleasure to work with. Unfortunately, many have become misguided, having 'drank the kool-aid'. A police officer's oath of office and the Police Services Act of Ontario both prioritize the Canadian Charter of Rights and Human Rights and the primary purpose and importance of duty. Somehow that was forgotten when 100 officers and 10 mounted units moved in to shut down a brisket BBQ restaurant.

Any remaining trust or hope was shattered that day. Now we watch our rights destroyed on a daily basis across this once great land. The men and women of law enforcement need to look deep within to ask themselves how they want history to view them.

My message to mankind under this spell is this. If you're afraid now, you have no idea how bad it's going to get if you don't all wake up very soon, look at real data, do the math and reestablish our original normal.

It's Time To Create Our Own New Reality

By Shawn Jason

Humanity is at a fork in the road.

As this unbelievably bizarre year here on earth wraps up, I think it is pretty clear to everyone by now... there is no going back to how things were before. And maybe that's not so bad, really. I'm sure most will agree, back was broken anyway in so many ugly ways. Humanity really needed a good, swift kick in the butt, and 2020 certainly provided that, with a steel toe boot!

Now, big change is upon us whether we like it or not. We must accept that. And now is the time for a really big decision by each and every one of us. Are we going to follow along with the new normal that is being hammered into humanity right now by just a tiny little fraction of a % of the population who care not for our best interests? Or are we going to grab hold of this thing and create a whole new reality of our own that is truly healthy, peaceful & prosperous for all?

I have great hope for humanity. I see us coming together to shake free from the power hungry few at the top who have been sucking the life force out of humanity for a very long time. I see us standing up, turning our backs on the old and beginning to create the new. I literally see it happening right now. This newspaper is one example.

We are many and together we can literally make anything happen. But we must first re-learn how to connect and trust each other more. Together we are strong. Together we are unstoppable. Humanity is good. People are kind. Most humans are decent inside. The ways of the world have led a lot of us astray and distracted us with the concept of working hard want. We must change course, immediately.

This is why I speak up. This is why I created this paper. I feel compelled to present information to the people that the mainstream is not, yet should be!

There are an astounding amount of expert voices all around the world saying these lockdowns are taking far more lives than they are saving. There are countless health professionals saying that this illness is easy to treat and that people need not be dying. More law enforcement are speaking out and over in Spain the police are even now standing with the people. (You did know that massive protests have been erupting all around the world to push back against lockdowns & extreme overreach of governments, right?)

There is clearly (once one looks at all the evidence without heavy pre-judgements) a global agenda being rolled out on all of humanity, and it doesn't look pretty. I know it is a tough pill for many to swallow, but it really must be looked at by all because if we are right, then nothing matters more, than for us to stop this agenda and start building our own new reality.

and being 'successful' 'individuals' in life, keeping our attention on anything other than our true potentials and the reality of what is going on behind the scenes.

The good news is, we are beginning to see. Slowly but surely, yet faster and faster, we are waking up and seeing bigger. And only when we see can we decide to choose differently. This is an exciting time!

I have been watching more and more people begin to recognize, there is undoubtedly an intentional, global agenda to destabilize and essentially destroy humanity as we know it and all of its systems. We are being manipulated and moulded into accepting a new, highly controlled, corporate owned, terribly bleak reality that I assure you, we absolutely do not

So I implore you, please have a critical mind and look at things more deeply. You just may be surprised at what you find. And when you do get hungry to learn more, visit druthers.net. I'd love to see you there.

Thank you for reading this paper with a curious mind. The world is a much more grand and incredible reality than we yet realize, but we are beginning to ;) I love you.

Shawn Jason (creator of Druthers.net)

P.S. It truly pains me to watch my fellow human beings afraid of getting close to one another, like we are all somehow a danger to each other, especially when all this fear is completely unnecessary. This fear has been hammered into us. And THAT is unhealthy. Please know, fear is over, if you want it.

The Assault On Organized Religion

By Timothy Himes

As the lockdowns continue, churches remain shuttered with their congregations unable to attend worship services. This is a disturbing sight for me and should concern all Canadians deeply, regardless of beliefs.

In November, the public health office in Wellington County detected an outbreak of coronavirus in a Mennonite school, and swiftly imposed mask wearing and a ban on singing! These directives weren't followed closely enough, so their schools and churches were ordered closed.

The old order Mennonites live in rural areas, they're usually identifiable by their unique dress and simple lifestyle, and are historically known to be conscientious objectors, and non-confrontational. They're not connected by technology, they don't have cellphones or cars.

Their kids can't do school over a zoom call because

State-Sanctioned Bullying: Turning Us Against Each Other

By Chantal Ashley

As more lockdowns loom and fear continues to be sold wholesale by all levels of government and established media, a palpable sense of malaise is building amongst Ontarians and all Canadians.

Uncertainty abounds as to when the next lockdown might come and what elements of its now globally-established 'toolbox' it might employ. The threat of any combination of business closures, restriction on movement, social activities, sales of goods, curfews, school closures, border closures are creating levels of stress that are contributing to severe instability in our lives and communities. Combine this heightened tension with increasingly harsh enforcement of the COVID rules with each new wave of lockdown and appeals from our leaders for us to snitch, shun, and publicly shame anyone who appears to be non-compliant, and we encounter a situation ripe for violence.

Division between and among citizens is increasing and this is not without design. The government has long used divisive techniques to keep the focus off of itself and the oppression it perpetuates. The term given to this practice is lateral violence. This "displaced violence directed against ones peers rather than adversaries...is a cycle of abuse and its roots lie in factors such as: colonisation, oppression, intergenerational trauma and the ongoing experiences of racism and discrimination." (Wikipedia)

In Canada it is recognized that lateral violence has been employed to maintain discord and disorganization within the Indigenous community by destroying their social fabric. It is sometimes also called internalized colonialism to reflect how people in positions of powerlessness covertly or overtly direct their dissatisfaction inward toward each other, toward themselves, and toward those less powerful than themselves.

The COVID campaign narrative dominating traditional and social media spaces explicitly encourages us to these types of violence against our peers who are not following the rules of the 'new normal' without pausing to take a moment to wonder about their individual circumstances. Because we're being conditioned to think we're doing the right thing by calling out these 'troublemakers,' it ironically becomes easier to act in ways that are inherently anti-social. By participating in these types of aggressions, we unwittingly trade in our familial, interpersonal, and community dependence that make us human, for greater dependence on unknowable, impersonal institutions, technology, and the material comforts of consumer culture.

For those who have physical or mental impairments that make it dangerous to wear a mask, who require a larger social circle to maintain functioning in their lives, or those who wish to exercise their legal rights as laid out by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the threat of state-sanctioned violence is spreading- and much faster than the virus. The risk of experiencing harassment and violence when going they don't have computers! Their church has always been the focal point and connective hub of the community. To take that away from them is truly unconscionable.

Causing a stir goes against their beliefs, but a pastor in Aylmer, Ontario is more than willing to speak up against injustice. Pastor Henry Hilderbrandt, of the Church of God (a modern offshoot of the Mennonite faith) has continued to hold parking lot church services, and has also become a prominent speaker in the fight against "the new normal".

Pastor Hilderbrandt's peaceful courage, and vocal determination has reminded me of the best aspects of church fellowship, and the fact that religious freedom has always been considered a cornerstone of our society. In fact, many immigrants in Canada today, came here to escape religious persecution. I'm also very grateful to his congregation for standing up repeatedly when it has counted.

But speaking of immigrants, here's a little background out in public is growing, and much of that violence is perpetrated by people in our immediate communities and even families.

There have already been more than a few deaths directly related to the COVID public health measures and restrictions, including a young man shot to death in a Scarborough LCBO parking lot by another patron over social distancing and a 73-year old man in Minden killed by the police after a masking dispute escalated quickly. Similar incidents have been reported in Los Angeles, New York, and Michigan. In Louisville, a doctor was arrested after being filmed strangling a teenager for not complying. Regular people have been fined and dragged out of public spaces.

The state, through its relentless media campaign, has now made it clear that curiosity is a sin worthy of exile in the new 'cancel culture.' The chasm between friends, family and neighbours that is created by state-sanction social prohibition is widened by the repetitive messaging that paints anyone who has questions about the state of our society, government, and policies is written of as a 'far-right conspiracy peddler' and censored online. If the person in question is involved in the wellness industry, they might be deemed a sucker for 'conspirituality' who has sadly been led astray. By taking away the possibility of personal accountability, these people are essentially dehumanized and written off by mainstream society.

This push to crush curiosity is being combined with a simultaneous effort to dampen nervous system responses that promote true mind-body health, including optimal immune functioning. The restrictions on close human contact and mandates for social distancing are no accident. By isolating us, and then creating a constantly shifting yardstick over long periods of time, it is ensured that ingrained trauma will be passed along to the next generation. Bullying culture is one that instills fear of one another, rather than the powerful government bureaucrats and corporations which are the true and historically-proven sources of violence in our society.

As Brene Brown, the author, researcher and popular Ted-talker on vulnerability and shame has said, "You cannot shame or belittle people into changing their behaviors." Instead, it tends to lead to resentment and rebellion as is evidenced by the tenacity and willingness of average citizens to stand up, even to certain brutality, that defines social movements throughout history. Those of us who have questions that are going unanswered by politicians unable or unwilling to engage in thoughtful debate about the facts while remaining deafeningly mute about the harms caused by the lockdown measures are only getting more curious.

As our collective mental health declines and violence against self and others increases, please remember to remain connected to your humanity and have empathy for others. Keep an open mind about what others may be experiencing and keep having transparent, authentic conversations about the important issues of the day. Most of all, be kind.

history. My mom was Mennonite and her parents experienced the revolution in the Ukraine as society fell apart toward the end of the first world war. The Mennonite people had it quite good in their adopted country for decades, becoming very successful farmers. But when things began to collapse, they quickly became targets. Several thousand were killed, many thousands more were beaten, raped and robbed.

My grandfather returned to the farm with his family to find his brother hanging dead in the barn, having been used for bayonet practice. Against the Mennonite creed, he joined the white army and fought the communists for the remainder of the conflict, leaving for Canada several years later with his wife and baby, just before the iron curtain closed for good. He settled in Steinbach, MB where my mom was born.

Why do I mention all this? Just to point out that this isn't the first rodeo for the Mennonites. They witnessed oppression wash over them first hand and like many of us, they recognize similar conditions developing here.

So those troubles are only a generation away for me. Maybe that's why I'm so offended with the lockdowns and senseless rules which are destroying our society day by day. We can't allow it to deteriorate any further. Surely there is a peaceful solution to restoring our freedom?

Where is the danger in parishioners sitting in parked cars listening to the sermon on their radio? Of course, packed air flights are ok, packed big box stores are fine, but drive in church... heaven forbid! In fact, the Public Health office sent a letter to Pastor Hildebrandt's church in Aylmer, Ontario instructing him to ensure the cars are parked 6 feet apart, with no idling of engines. What?! You can't make this stuff up!

In early December:

Pastor Hilderbrandt was ticketed for attending a gathering in London 2 weeks prior.

Pastor Tobias Tissen in Steinbach, MB was ticketed for the same offence. All captured on video with police and bylaw officers arriving at his house at night, unable to answer the pastors questions, never mind look at him.

Patrick Allard was ticketed for attempting to attend a Church of God gathering in Winnipeg that never happened, it was prevented by the RCMP.

Christian minister Artur Palowski in Calgary has been repeatedly prevented from feeding the poor people on the street, and ticketed. Fining the clergy and denying them the freedom to practice their faith? To feed the hungry?!

This isn't the country I signed up for. Even the most devout atheist would agree that closing churches isn't the sign of a healthy, progressive society.

It's apparent to anyone paying attention now, the extent to which the media has lied to us.

Those same lies keep the people afraid, and the lockdowns in place. Many of the police know this is all wrong, they're just following orders to keep their jobs. Hopefully they do what's right, and decide to stand with the people, so we can all avoid what the globalists would subject us to. I believe they will.

Hey, we're all happy to buy some great furniture or produce from the Mennonites at the roadside, but can we stand by them, and add our voice to theirs when we see injustice?

God is with us, and good will triumph. Keep the faith.

YouTube Censors Prominent Physician-Researcher’s Senate Hearing

By Tea Lynn @tealynnm

On December 8th, 2020, Dr. Pierre Kory gave a very passionate speech while appearing as a witness before a Senate Committee Hearing on early outpatient COVID-19 treatments. Dr. Kory, president of the Frontline COVID-19 Critical Care Alliance (FLCCC), called for the government to swiftly review the already expansive and still rapidly emerging evidence on Ivermectin.

“We are a group of some of the most highly published physicians in the world, we have nearly 2000 peer-reviewed publications among us, led by Dr. Professor Paul Marik — who’s our intellectual leader (and wrote the book on critical care medicine). We came together early on, in the pandemic and all we have sought is to review the world’s literature on every facet of this disease, trying to develop effective protocols.”

The FLCCC is known for their Math+ protocol— an effective COVID-19 treatment that combines the use of corticosteroids, vitamins, and other medications. Dr. Kory’s first senate committee hearing on May 8th also went viral when he advocated for the use of corticosteroids, against the recommendations of the WHO and NIH. Thanks to Dr. Kory’s first testimony, many hospitals were already using corticosteroids weeks before the WHO changed its stance on corticosteroids in mid-June, following the release of their Dexamethasone pre-print study results.

“I am severely troubled by the fact that the NIH, the FDA and the CDC — I do not know of any task force that was assigned or compiled to review repurposed drugs in an attempt to treat this disease. Everything has been about novel and/or expensive pharmaceutical-engineered drugs, things like Tocilizumab and Remdesivir and monoclonal antibodies and vaccines... I do not know of a task force that has focused on re-purposed drugs. I will tell you that my group and our organization, I will say that we have filled that void.”

“I want to talk about the fact that we have a solution to this crisis. There is a drug that is proving to be of miraculous impact. And when I say miracle, I do not use that term lightly. I don’t want to be sensationalized when I say that. That is a scientific recommendation based on mountains of data that has emerged in the last three months.

When I am told that we are touting things that are not FDA or NIH recommended. Let me be clear, the NIH’s recommendation on Ivermectin, which is to not use it outside of control trials, is from August 27th. We are now in December. This is three to four months later. Mountains of data have emerged from many centers and countries around the world showing the miraculous effectiveness of Ivermectin. It basically obliterates transmission of this virus. If you take it you will not get sick.”

“It has already won the Nobel prize in medicine in 2015 for its impacts on global health in the eradication of parasitic diseases. It is proving to be an immensely powerful antiviral and anti-inflammatory agent. It is critical for its use in this disease.

We again, stand by our manuscript... but please recognize peer review takes time, it takes months. We do not have months... I’m a lung specialist, I’m an ICU specialist. I’ve cared for more dying COVID patients than anyone can imagine... Early treatment is key... and if I have to go back to work next week, any further deaths are going to be needless deaths, and I cannot be traumatized by that. I cannot keep caring for patients when I know that they could have been saved with earlier treatment and the drug that will treat them and prevent the hospitalization is Ivermectin. “

The scientific paper Dr. Kory is asking the NIH to review is a meta-analysis of various studies reviewed by his team. The meta-analysis includes a variety of studies, including 11 randomized controlled trials (RCT) with over 4000 patients. Typically, meta-analysis studies that include RCTs are often referred to as “the platinum standard of evidence.”

His results: Ivermectin was found to be 98% effective in preventing COVID when compared to placebo controls. It was also 91% effective in early COVID and 60% effective in late COVID when compared to standard of care.

Dr. Pierre Kory speaking at a Senate Committee Hearing on early outpatient COVID-19 treatments.

Dr. Kory’s meta-analysis concluded that 100% of the RCTs found Ivermectin to be beneficial — with 1 in 2 million odds of this happening by chance. If you were to include all the studies on Ivermectin (100% of which report positive effects), there is an estimated 1 in 67 million chance that the treatment is ineffective. During his testimony, Dr. Kory emphasized “the drug is so safe” and that no safety concerns emerged as a result of his study. the positive results, Dr. Kory’s meta-analysis’ are being dismissed among officials because the randomized controlled trials were conducted in “2nd world countries” like India, Iraq, Egypt, and Argentina. If that is the true reason for dismissal, then the real question becomes: Why, after 7 months of Ivermectin looking like a promising COVID-19 have all the rich countries ignored the many calls from physicians to study the medication? After all, doctors have been pleading for governmental organizations to look into Ivermectin for many months.

Ivermectin first gained widespread popularity in early June after the release of several promising studies. On June 22, following reports of thousands of people in Latin America using the veterinary formula, the WHO issued a statement saying that Ivermectin should not be used to treat COVID-19, and that it would not be included in its Solidarity Trials. A few weeks later, the NIH issued a similar statement and declined requests to study the drug.

To this day, there is only one early anti-viral treatment for COVID-19 that NIH and Health Canada have approved and endorsed: the unproven and expensive drug Remdesivir.

With so many healthcare professionals speaking up about the potential effectiveness of Ivermectin, it’s been hard for social media’s so called “fact-checkers” to censor the scientific community — but that hasn’t stopped them from trying. The original video, uploaded by FLCCC Alliance, was removed by YouTube. Other videos that mentioned Dr. Kory’s meta-analysis were also censored, including a popular video made by Dr. Chris Martenson from the PeakProsperity YouTube channel. The Frontline COVID-19 Critical Care Alliance’s Facebook page was also put into “FB Jail” for 3 days following the release of their paper.

But don’t worry — copies of his meta-analysis and senate testimony are still out there and spreading like wildfire! You can (hopefully still) find a reuploaded version of the speech on Druther’s Facebook and/or NewTube Page.

Radical Social Engineering Behind ‘Great Reset

marvelling at ‘the staggering confluence of emerging technology breakthroughs, covering wide-ranging fields such as artificial intelligence, robotics, the internet of things, autonomous vehicles, , nanotechnology, biotechnology, materials science, energy storage and quantum computing.”

He describes an ‘Internet of Things’ connected world with education delivered through augment and virtual reality. Plans for intrusive sensors to be installed across homes, clothes, transport and energy networks and smart cities with their ‘all-important data platforms.’ He predicts that many professional roles — including lawyers, financial analysts, doctors, journalists, accountants, insurance underwriters or librarians — may soon be partly, or completely, automated.

Schwab even goes as far as to suggest that mind-boggling innovations triggered by the fourth industrial revolution, from biotechnology to AI, will redefine the human experience — from both a biological and a social standpoint. One particularly chilling section of the book details with some relish how these technologies “can intrude into the hitherto private space of our minds, reading our thoughts and influencing our behaviour”.

You will no doubt hear a lot more about The Great Reset over the coming months. Prince Charles can’t stop banging on about it. Sesame Street’s Grover flogs its benefits to the youth. You can learn all about this multi-billion/trillion dollar plan through the WEF’s own website, books and podcasts. And if you have a couple of billion dollars to your name you can even take part in ongoing online group discussions with other movers and shakers.

While we can, and amazingly still do, argue about the threat from a ‘virus’ with a 99.5+% survival rate until we are blue-in-the-face, it is important to recognise that the trajectory we are now on was planned and coordinated in advance over many years, and that the earth-shattering changes certainly do not represent the logical reaction to a typical ‘flu season, as much as they attempt to convince us otherwise.

We must also not forget that the ‘we are all in this together’ mantra is a barefaced lie. So far 2020 has been highly profitable for the billionaire classes: a recent report by Swiss bank UBS found that this group increased its wealth by more than a quarter (27.5%) at the height of the crisis from April to July. This was as millions of people around the world lost their jobs or were struggling to get by on government schemes.

Granted, it is somewhat depressing to observe our self-appointed overlords speak so confidently and boldly about their plans for us. While it may even appear to be a done deal — and perhaps it is — without acceptance and compliance from the masses, Schwab’s manifesto is merely the ramblings of an unhinged megalomaniac.

A Cockroach Pandemic

By Michael Jenkins

We got a message from our landlord that he would be fumigating the apartment next door about three weeks after the previous tenant moved out. After the process, he showed me the apartment and there were some dead cockroaches on the floor as well as outside on the staircases. Later that day we set about removing everything from our kitchen cupboards to make sure none of the cockroaches had made their way into our apartment and hidden there. That night we looked under the bed and took the sheets and blankets off the bed and gave them one last shake before we turned in for the night in case one of the critters might be hiding there.

The next morning we were awakened by a knock on the door by a man from the government who had come to our building to inform us that there was a world-wide cockroach pandemic that had started in China and was quickly spreading around the world. We were instructed to stay in our apartment and only go out for essential items like food and toilet paper. Additionally we were told to wear a blue cloth and paper face mask, the kind the dentist wears. The mask was supposed to prevent the spread of cockroach infection which could be passed from person to person.

Restaurants began to close and there was a curfew imposed from 2:00 pm in the afternoon until 7:00 am in the morning. That only left a short time in the morning to shop for essential items. Then about a week later the man from the government returned to tell us that our building was under a 14 day quarantine because cockroaches had been found there. No one was allowed to leave the building or have visitors. All food had to be delivered from the few restaurants that were still open for take out.

Meanwhile more and more people were wearing those blue masks during times they were allowed to be out on the streets and all the schools and churches had been closed. We began to see news broadcasts on the TV from all over the world with people wearing masks. Even the news broadcasters and the government officials that were telling us to stay out of public areas and wear our masks in public, were shown on TV wearing masks themselves. The exterminators had all been deemed non-essential and closed by the government so if you got cockroaches in your house there was no one to call. The government announced the insecticides that were normally used for cockroaches were ineffective and that it was dangerous to use them. It was made illegal to buy these insecticides or even tell people that they were effective and these products quickly became unavailable. Some professional exterminators went on social media to tell people that these products were safe and effective against cockroaches but their posts were quickly banned or removed and the government made great efforts to discredit them for what they were saying. Some statisticians posted charts and graphs on the internet and said that there were no more cockroaches than last year at this time, so there was no cockroach pandemic. Their voices were also censored, their posts removed and people were warned not to share their videos on social media.

We heard some rumors that some people in our little town had been infected with cockroaches and their whole families had been sent to quarantine centres for 14 days but I never saw any more of the critters in my building or knew anyone who had seen any of them around. But there were newscasts from one large city a few hundred miles away where people were shown running from their buildings and of cockroaches swarming in the streets. Meanwhile government trucks were combing the streets every day after curfew spraying large white clouds of airborne particles that hung in the air for as much as an hour.

Many people were thrown out of work and no public transportation was allowed; only trucks were allowed on the highways and streets to deliver essential goods and perform essential services. We had originally been told that this state of emergency would be temporary but weeks later we were still having curfews and line-ups at the grocery stores which were only allowing 5 people in at a time. There were lines stretching along the street and around the corner because everyone had been told not only to wear a mask but to never be any closer to other people than 6 feet for fear of passing the cockroach infection to others. We were told this was the only way we could prevent the spread of cockroaches and we all faithfully obeyed because we saw people on TV that were being wrestled to the ground by police and shoved into police cars while the government officials warned that we could be fined $1,000 for not wearing a mask or using a public facility like a city park. All public sports and entertainment venues were closed and performers and teams were restricted to live TV broadcasts while they performed in stadiums empty of people.

I felt a deep sadness as I gazed at the empty streets and park outside of my apartment window where we had voluntarily imprisoned ourselves. The normal hum of traffic was gone, as was the laughter of children playing and riding bicycles. The park benches and paths were empty, where usually there would be people strolling and sitting. There were pictures on TV from around the world of deserted streets and shopping malls with boarded up storefronts.

Finally the government announced that they made a deal with some large pharmaceutical companies for a vaccine that would prevent vaccinated people from spreading cockroaches. We were assured this was the only way we could end this pandemic. Vaccination centres were opened up all over the country and people were informed by sound trucks where they were to go to be vaccinated. Tomorrow morning we would have to report to one of the city parks where large white tents had been set up where government workers would be administering the vaccinations.

The next morning I awoke to the sound of the traffic humming in the streets outside our apartment. I ran to the window and opened it to hear the sound of children laughing and skipping on their way to school. The sun was shining and there were no white tents in the park across the street. People were walking there on their way to work and elderly couples were watching their grandchildren at play. Tears welled up in my eyes as I realized the whole cockroach pandemic had just been a nightmarish dream that could never happen in a sane world to sane people and I was filled with gratitude for everything that I had which could so easily be lost if we lose sight of the things that really matter.

There's a treasure trove of whole foods and herbs that support the vast mechanisms of our immune systems. The ingredients selected for this concoction were chosen for their harmony in creating a delicious drink, while offering a broad spectrum of bodily support for us during these intense and stressing times. These ingredients are also easy to find, and some you may already have in stock, so let's get started!

- 1) Fill a kettle or pot with a lid with 2 cups of spring or purified water. Bring to a boil, then add 1 teaspoon of Tulsi (powder or loose leaf tea) and 1 teaspoon of Thyme loose leaf tea. If you are growing this perennial herb, using a few fresh sprigs of Thyme instead is even better! Turn off heat, and let the tea steep covered for at least 15 minutes. You can keep it warm in your oven at lowest heat setting if you want to enjoy your elixir hot instead of just warm.
- 2) Place the following ingredients into a blender:
 - 1" long piece of Ginger (skin peeled & thinly sliced). Use more if you really like its intense flavour.
 - 2 Medjool Dates (pitted and chopped for thorough blending)
 - 1 Tablespoon Coconut Cream (you can substitute with 2 tbsp. of shredded coconut)
 - 1 Tablespoon Raw Honey

Immunity Elixir

- 1 Teaspoon Cinnamon Powder
 - ½ Teaspoon Turmeric Powder (if you have access to fresh turmeric use it same as the ginger)
 - 2 Cardamom Pods (shell removed use just the inner seeds)
 - 1 Banana
 - 3" piece of Aloe Vera Leaf (cut away outer skin use just its inner clear gel). Remainder of Aloe leaf can be stored in the fridge for a few days. It has many uses.
- 3) Strain the hot tea directly into the blender. If using a high speed blender, 20 seconds is enough to pulverize the ingredients and create a smooth drink. For low end machines blend for up to 1 minute to create a smooth drink. Makes approximately a 3 cup serving. You can alter quantities and add other immune boosting herbs to this drink to suit your preferences and needs! Have this as a daily drink during periods of increased stress, as a tonic support for your immune, nervous and digestive systems!

Some ingredient highlights:

Honey is loaded with essential minerals and phytochemicals that support white blood cells, and so much more. Turmeric balances inflammatory responses when the body is overworking itself to fend off against pathogens. Ginger is a capable aid for combating pathogens and its soothing qualities can offer pain relief on various tissues. Cinnamon is an antioxidant powerhouse and has an impressive nutritional profile that supports the body through periods of challenged immunity, or in any situation of digestive trouble. Cardamom shares many healing attributes with ginger and cinnamon, working to ease phlegm, congestion, and offers relief for all manner of digestive discomforts.

Thyme is a powerful antiviral herb and able to ease a stressed nervous system. Tulsi is capable of easing excessive secretions from the lungs and supporting overall wellbeing of the respiratory system, while also calming the nervous system. Bananas are perfect fuel for the brain and topping up our energy reserves, while sporting powerful compounds to neutralize pathogenic bacteria, yeasts and viruses. Aloe Vera is a miracle food capable of restoring damaged bodily tissues, especially along the digestive tract; it is antimicrobial and purifies the blood along with easing oxidative stress.

CV-19 Vaccine Concerns

Note to Readers: The information contained in this article may challenge what you’ve been told about the COVID vaccine.

By Vaccine Choice Canada

In December 2020 Health Canada approved the Pfizer COVID-19 vaccine for use in Canada. Canada became the third country in the world to do so after the United Kingdom and Bahrain. A vaccine has been promised as the panacea to end the lockdowns and return life to normal. There are many reasons to be concerned that a vaccine will not enable a return to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

The Vaccine May Not Prevent Infection or Transmission

Those clamoring for a COVID vaccine are under the mistaken notion that the vaccine will protect them from infection from SARS-CoV-2. After all, isn’t this what a vaccine is for? The reality is that the COVID vaccines under development are not required to demonstrate that they prevent infection or transmission as a condition of licensure. This was apparent in a statement by Canada’s Chief Public Health Officer, Dr. Teresa Tam when announcing the new Pfizer vaccine.

Vaccine manufacturers are also not required to demonstrate that the vaccine causes a reduction in severe illness, hospitalization or death. According to a report in the British Medical Journal, “Hospital admissions and deaths from covid-19 are simply too uncommon in the population being studied for an effective vaccine to demonstrate statistically significant differences in a trial of 30,000 people. The same is true of its ability to save lives or prevent transmission: the trials are not designed to find out.” and transmission is not uncommon. Five vaccines — polio, diphtheria, pertussis (whooping cough), influenza and tetanus are not designed to prevent infection and transmission of illness. They only reduce the severity of symptoms should infection occur.

This begs the question — what will the COVID vaccine do? Public health authorities have said that vaccine recipients will still be required to wear masks, physically distance, and avoid crowds. CDC’s own data indicates that over 80% of individuals who test positive for COVID are asymptomatic, that is without any symptoms. For these individuals, a COVID vaccine will be all risk and no benefit.

COVID — A Low Lethality Illness

Many individuals who intend to be at the front of the line for a COVID vaccine will do so because they believe COVID is an illness with a high mortality. This fear, generated by governments and the corporate media, creates a sense of panic that compels people to unwittingly accept a novel medical product with an unknown safety profile.

In April, Canadian health officers stated, “In a best-case scenario, Canada’s total COVID-19 deaths can range from 11,000 to 22,000.” And “In the bad scenarios, deaths go well over 300,000.” The reality is that the number of deaths purportedly caused by COVID is at the low end of the best-case estimates, and of these, more than 80% occurred in the elderly in long-term care settings.

According to the latest CDC data, COVID — 19 is unlikely to cause death in the majority of the population. The overall lethality of COVID-19 is similar to a moderate seasonal flu. For our children, COVID is even less lethal than influenza. What is rarely acknowledged by our governments, health officers, and the corporate media is that safe and effective drugs for the prevention and treatment of COVID are now available. Such treatments negate the need for an ‘emergency use’ vaccine.

COVID Vaccine Uses Genetic Modification Technology

The most significant concern with the COVID vaccine is the introduction of messenger RNA/DNA technology. This genetic modification technology has never before been used in humans. The consequences of introducing genetic altering technology into a human body is unknown. The potential exists for catastrophic consequences for the person receiving the vaccine and for any future children.

The introduction of this technology is especially disconcerting given COVID vaccine manufacturers have demanded legal indemnity for any harm or injury caused by their products. The effect of legal indemnity is that vaccine manufacturers cannot be held liable when injuries and deaths occur. If these vaccines are as safe as claimed, why are manufacturers insisting upon indemnity? Would you buy a car — or anything else — from a company that is unwilling to stand behind its product?

Health Canada Oversight Insufficient

Many Canadians assume Health Canada provides rigorous oversight and would never permit a vaccine to be introduced into the Canadian market without robust testing to ensure both safety and effectiveness. Most Canadians are not aware that Health Canada does not conduct its own clinical trials to determine the safety and efficacy of a vaccine. Instead, Health Canada relies on the data provided by the vaccine manufacturers.

Canadians may also not be aware that vaccine producers as Merck and GlaxoSmithKline have paid billions in criminal penalties and settlements for research fraud, faking drug safety studies, failing to report safety problems, bribery, kickbacks and false advertising.

Health Canada also holds the perspective that it is not necessary for vaccine makers to test their products against a neutral placebo, a requirement for all other drugs and pharmaceutical products. Most health consumers are unaware that none of the vaccines on Canada’s childhood vaccination schedule were tested against a neutral placebo. The safety profile of a vaccine cannot be established without testing it against a neutral placebo.

Vaccines are products injected into healthy children and adults. Because of this the level of safety testing ought to be even more rigorous than is required with pharmaceutical drugs. This is not the case. The safety testing of the COVID vaccine products are less rigorous and incomplete. Normal development timelines of a vaccine product is five to ten years. It is impossible to identify the long-term adverse effects of a COVID vaccine in the few months the product has existed. COVID vaccines are not tested for their ability to cause cancer, damage an organism, change the genetic information of an organism, impact the foetus of a pregnant woman, or to impair fertility.

Vaccines are not benign medical products. Vaccination is an invasive medical procedure that delivers by injection complex biochemical drugs and now genetic modifying technology. The consequences of vaccination can be serious, permanent, and even deadly. More than $4.4 billion US has been paid in compensation to vaccine injured individuals in the United States. This figure does not represent the full extent of vaccine injury given that less than 1% of vaccine injury is reported. Note: Compensation was not paid by the manufacturers of the vaccines. It was paid from a fee assessed on taxpayers.

COVID Vaccination Is Human Experimentation

Normal safety protocols for vaccines involve testing in animals prior to testing on humans. This is especially critical with a coronavirus vaccine given its history of ‘pathogenic priming’. With previously attempted COVID vaccines, pathogenic priming caused an exaggerated immune response in lab animals resulting in severe injury and death. COVID vaccine makers have been permitted to bypass animal testing and move directly to testing on humans. Health Canada granted Pfizer ‘interim approval’ for deployment of their vaccine in the general public WITHOUT completing phase three safety trials. Health Canada also acknowledges that long-term safety data does not exist for the vaccine, nor its impact on immune-compromised patients, patients with chronic or debilitating conditions, pediatric populations, and pregnant women. There is no data that defines the vaccine’s interaction with other vaccines or prescription medications.

Human Experimentation

COVID vaccines include genetically manufactured mRNA, a never before utilized technology with unknown and potential life-altering consequences. This means the COVID vaccine testing is effectively human experimentation.

William Haseltine, a former Harvard Medical School professor is of the opinion that “These protocols seem designed to get a drug on the market sooner rather than later, on a timeline arguably based more on politics than public health.”

Questionable Vaccine Injury Compensation

In response to the public’s concerns with the COVID vaccine, the Government of Canada announced its intention to create a national vaccine injury compensation program. Canada is more than three decades behind other countries in acknowledging vaccine injury and providing financial compensation to those injured and killed by vaccination. The fact is Canada was one of only two G20 Nations without a national vaccine injury compensation program.

The other country is Russia.

With such a program, the ‘devil will be in the details’. It is unclear what injuries will be compensated, who will decide, what level of compensation will be offered, and who pays. Families of vaccine injured children have been advocating for a ‘manufacturer pays’ system of compensation since 1984. They believe the manufacturer, not the taxpayer, ought to be held responsible for injuries and deaths caused by vaccines. Without such accountability there is little incentive for manufacturers to make the safest vaccines possible.

With a taxpayer funded program, the vaccine manufacturers keep the profits and taxpayers pay for the failures. Such legal and financial immunity does not exist with any other product licensed for sale in Canada. The promise of a vaccine injury compensation program, without any details or manufacturer accountability offers little reassurance to Canadians concerned about vaccine injury.

No Individualized Risk-Benefit Analysis

The arguments used to legitimize, legalize and implement COVID vaccination policies are ideological rather than evidence-based medicine. What is missing in the rush to license a COVID vaccine is a risk-benefit analysis. No data exists to prove that the benefits of the COVID vaccine outweigh the risks.

Implementing a “one-size-fits-all” policy fails to recognize that the risk of infection and the risk of vaccination varies greatly depending upon a number of variables including age, pre-existing conditions, and whether one is a resident in an extended care facility.

Vaccine Mandates Violate Rights

Those advocating for mandates and coercive measures to impose a COVID vaccine are undermining essential individual rights and freedoms. Canada is a signatory to The Universal Declaration of Bioethics and Human Rights which describes consent as: “Any preventive, diagnostic and therapeutic medical intervention is only to be carried out with the prior, free and informed consent of the person concerned, based on adequate information. The consent should, where appropriate, be expressed and may be withdrawn by the person concerned at any time and for any reason without disadvantage or prejudice.”

According to the Nuremberg Code, developed in response to the medical abuses of the Nazi regime, informed voluntary consent means that “the person involved... should be able to exercise free power of choice, without the intervention of any element of force, fraud, deceit, duress, over-reaching, or other ulterior form of constraint or coercion.”

Coercive vaccine policies that are being proposed by various governments and public health officers are a clear violation of Charter rights and freedoms and ethical medicine.

Censorship

The foundation of an ethical medical system is informed consent. Informed consent has two requirements: informed and consent. It is difficult to become informed when information that challenges the government’s narrative is actively censored. Mainstream corporate and social media platforms vigorously censor vaccine information if it challenges the position of government, even censoring information from medical professionals and recognized vaccine experts.

Consent is compromised when citizens are deprived of their access to goods and services, employment and travel if they chose to dissent. It’s dangerous when censorship is combined with coercive vaccination policies that take away the ethical and legal right to informed consent.

Freedom Means Choice

Vaccination is an invasive medical procedure. We hold the principle that where there is risk, there must be choice. To deny choice is to deny freedom. The threat we face to our civil rights is significant. At risk is the very freedom that forms a democratic society. The right to informed consent must be preserved in a free society. Rights do not cease to be important during times of emergency, rather they become even more important.

“It is from numberless diverse acts of courage and belief that human history is shaped. Each time a man stands up for an ideal, or acts to improve the lot of others, or strikes out against injustice, he sends forth a tiny ripple of hope.” - RFK

Immiseration In The 4th Industrial Revolution: The Insights Of Alison McDowell

By Guy Crittenden

Each year the Oxford English Dictionary selects new words to officially add to the language, sometimes with great fanfare. For 2020, I nominate the term “immiseration” — which I learned from JP and Julie Collins at Book of Ours (a website and YouTube channel), who’ve spent much of the year making video essays about the important work of Philadelphia-based researcher Alison McDowell.

The term which, as you’d expect, refers to the process of making people miserable, captures the zeitgeist of 2020’s self-distanced, masked and divisive developments, the erosion of our civil liberties, and the “new normal” in which apparently we’re disease vectors who dare not sit near one another in a restaurant — something unimaginable when we were first asked to “flatten the curve.”

No one wants misery, which is why World Economic Forum founder Klaus Schwab’s vision of the so-called Fourth Industrial Revolution (4IR) will never be fully implemented. Yet many of its dimensions are moving forward without much opposition because they’re unknown, being the product of invitation-only meetings like Bilderberg.

The aforementioned McDowell offers key insights into what the global elites have planned for us, beyond the COVID narrative. Their schemes are disturbing even if we set aside the eugenicist/transhumanist and depopulation dimension.

According to McDowell, if people don’t rise up, we face a future of “digital chattel slavery, our freedoms stolen by automation, artificial intelligence, ubiquitous surveillance, and synthetic biology. Track and trace apps will be replaced with injectable nanorobotic biosensors. Look to Profusa’s collaboration with DARPA and Moderna’s ‘software of life.’”

McDowell’s writing is peppered with terms that seem derived from science fiction, gleaned from various think tanks and banking firms, which have pioneered novel investments in “human capital bond” markets and a gamified, tokenized economy.

Oligarchs like Gates, Schwab and Bloomberg would “would render us digitally, feed us into markets, trade us as data commodities, and harness our spirits to hasten the Singularity.” Memorably she implores: “Once our jobs are given to robots and algorithms we will be expected to embrace transhumanism to fuel their anti-life Matrix.”

McDowell initially studied the threat to public education from charter schools, then expanded to health-care and other markets. Every aspect of the economy is being taken over by the deep state in concert with Big Data, Big Pharma, and Big Oil, packaged and marketed in the seductive language of racial and gender equality and sustainable development.

Health and wellness equate to everyone being fully vaccinated; it’s assumed that everything from shopping to school to a doctor’s visit is better if it’s online, ergo we have tele-health and tele-education, and smart meters and smart cities.

While certain environmental protection goals are laudable, McDowell warns the technocrats have chosen to build a militarized simulation in place of degrowth, reciprocity, and right relationships between people, and between humans and nature.

2020 was the year when global elites concentrated their power and shifted capitalism into the digital realm. VR is for them what the New World was for the investors who sponsored Christopher Columbus and the other explorers: a vast new commons ripe for exploitation and a population ready for subjugation.

“Through gamification and augmented reality,” McDowell writes, “stakeholder capitalists aim to reengineer life so it can continue to serve the interests of consumer culture and debt finance. Digital twinning will emerge in a few more years once 6G replaces 5G. NYU Tandon is working on that now.

“Social impact investing, pay for success finance, and development impact bonds are aligned to the United Nation’s Sustainable Development Goals. Fourteen of the seventeen relate to vaccination, a central feature of the cybernetic program.

IBM, Google, Amazon, MasterCard and Goldman Sachs are among the companies designing a bewildering suite of new businesses and technologies for which the public is woefully unprepared. Microsoft has a patent with 060606 in its title and Luciferine in its ingredients that will mine our biometric data much as computers mine Bitcoin. Biometric passports and digital identities will aggregate data for investors. (This is why the technocrats are so hellbent on installing 5G systems despite their dangerous EMF radiation.)

“Smart environments with sensors as small as dust will transmit information about our activities from the cellular level to our social relations in real time,” McDowell states.

Financiers have designed markets in measurable behaviour change, predicted and tracked by Silicon Valley technology. It can be difficult to grasp how this all works, but imagine bets placed on poor children and, say, their educational outcomes. None of this is about making the world a better place: as McDowell notes, “Human capital futures markets will be fueled by misery, poverty and trauma, all of which are in abundant supply with these lockdowns.”

Our immiseration is by design.

Welcome to the world of stakeholder capitalism and its financialized “green” totalitarian schemes — a planet “geofenced” with COVIPASS immunization passports, its inhabitants branded and contact traced like cattle and ranked via Chinese-style social credit score systems. It’s the collusion of big business and big government, the literal definition of fascism. Yet it’s a stranger mashup of fascism and communism called “technocracy.” You never voted for it, yet it’s being imposed. Unelected bureaucrats at the WHO and corporatists are deciding your future, what can go in your body, and where you can move about. You’re being controlled — to the extent of being told how many relatives you can have for Christmas dinner; many have exchanged their freedom for the illusion of safety. Yet, here it is.

Teens Making The World A Better Place By Helping Those In Need

By Màiri Corneman

PROJECT PHOENIX is spearheaded by 13-year old Phoenix Scott. She is an activist and speaker who is passionate about preserving the rights and freedoms for all, and for helping others. With the support of her loving family, peers and the community, she formed Project Phoenix, a community focused non-profit that offers assistance to underprivileged and at-risk individuals. She is a young warrior spirit who has chosen to be an active participant in creating a better world for us all. In her young life she has given many speeches to address the challenges children face during these unprecedented times and has organized events for the members of Project Phoenix to spread awareness for children’s mental health. With the increase of homelessness, the focus has shifted to support those who need it most, and Project Phoenix has been travelling the 401 corridor to bring food, clothing, shelter and supplies to the many people who are in need. The team at Project Phoenix strives to inspire and improve the lives of those who need assistance, while empowering kids and teens to be the ones who provide the ideas, the work and the feedback, and improving their own mental health in the process. Everyone who is part of the team does so on a volunteer basis. All supplies are funded through our supporters and donors, and for this we are truly grateful!

The world has shown us that when we come together as a community amazing things happen! We are blessed, and we are humbled by the generosity of many.

“What inspires me is seeing how much of an impact a couple of teenagers can have on someone’s life. It’s seeing a person’s face light up when we interact with them, and especially when we give them a hug.

Being out there and seeing people from all different communities and listening to their stories, offering them acceptance and love — that is deeply rewarding to me.

After all, we are all one and there should be no reason why we can’t all stand shoulder to shoulder with one another, no matter what our circumstances are.” — Phoenix

Five Reasons To Have Hope For Humanity In 2021 & Beyond

By Mark DeNicola

2020 has certainly been an “interesting” year to say the least. And while there are at least two very different perspectives towards everything that’s been happening -including who may or may not ultimately be behind it all, and to what end -it’s been undeniably challenging for all of us.

Even the most introverted among us cannot love a reality where we are largely kept away from our loved ones, discouraged from leaving the “com-forts” of our own home for anything other than the bare essentials, and a looming fear of either or both the virus itself or what could come from its continued presence.

Join us on Telegram: Be sure you get our most important and latest content by joining our free Telegram channel. You can also meet and chat with like minds! Click here to join.

It has taken its toll on all of us, but it has also given us a number of glimpses into humanity that I’m sure many of us thought we may never see in this lifetime. Here are 5 reasons why despite all of the ugliness that 2020 has brought out in all of us, I still personally hold hope for humanity in 2021 and beyond:

1. People (For The Most Part) Are Inherently Good

While either watching the mainstream news or scrolling through your favorite social media news-feed may serve as better proof of the opposite, I’m a firm believer that there are substantially more examples of the goodness in people than there is proof of the less than flattering. True heroes have risen out of this situation in communities all across the world, whether or not their actions are in alignment with your overall perspective of what’s going on.

Yes, the healthcare worker that has been working overtime to give people the care they need is a hero that cares, even if you think this entire situation is a hoax. And yes, the person fighting to ensure we are given the full story before rolling up our sleeves to accept anything is a hero that cares, even if you’ve been hoping and praying for that substance’s arrival. Heroes are everywhere and in even far less outward-ly noticeable ways if you just choose to look for them without bias.

2. The Response In Support Of Local Businesses

While certain mega-companies may be thriving like never before since this entire situation kicked in, there has also been a very heartwarming response by many of us to stand by and support local businesses. Whether it’s by continuing to purchase from them through curb-side pickup, promoting them through social media, or even standing up against any differences in how they are allowed to operate by comparison to the big box chains, quite a few of us have been doing our part to show that we care. We want to see them remain a part of our community moving forward.

3. How Much We’ve Already Withstood To Make It To This Point

As I said to open this piece, 2020 hasn’t been easy.

The fact that we are all still here is a testament to just how resilient and capable we are of overcoming what is still to come our way.

4. The Power of Our Mind’s Desire To Get Beyond This

I’m a firm believer in the incredible power of our mind, and just how much of an impact it can have on our ability to sink or swim in challenging times. With this situation now having gone on for months, I don’t know anyone that isn’t longing to freely spend quality time with their loved ones, to gather at mass events, to travel or do any of the seemingly endless number of things that currently aren’t possible. That desire to me is a powerful fuel that will drive us all to ensure 2021 and beyond are much closer to what the human experience was designed to be: free.

5. We Are Largely All Driven By The Same Core Intention

This is by far the biggest reason why I am holding out hope for humanity in 2021 and beyond, so please read these words carefully. As divided as we may currently seem, where some of us see things in one way while many others see things completely differently, but both think the other are flat out crazy and/or “blind” to not be in agreement with them, we actually have the same core intention.

Yes, believe it or not, the person who believes QAnon and the person who trusts Dr. Fauci and Bill Gates both ultimately want the same thing: for them and their loved ones to be healthy, happy and free.

We cannot lose sight of that core similarity -and it’s a similarity that exists even if your beliefs aren’t as drastic as the examples I chose to give for dramatic effect. So rather than creating another post where you label the other as either a “sheep” or “conspiracy theorist” remember that you really aren’t that different after all. And the sooner we cut the name calling and instead start focusing on how we can truly get beyond this, while uncovering whatever the truth really is, the sooner we can all get back to what we know and love.

Ready For a Daily Dose Of Truth?

By Victor Coscarella

Every Saturday I meet up with my family at Yonge-Dundas Square and every week I hear a lot of the same comments. One thing I hear often is: I just don’t get it. Why is everyone so blind to the truth? After thinking about it, I realized the problem isn’t that people are blind to the truth; rather, the ‘truth’ is being distorted and weaponized by our politicians, the mainstream media and big tech.

This is exactly why new, alternative media outlets like Druthers are in such high demand. The public is aware that traditional media cannot be trusted anymore, but this leaves them with a massive information gap. If you can’t trust the mainstream media and alternative information is being heavily censored online, how can you possibly stay well informed? This is why we need newspapers like Druthers more than ever before... to help the public distinguish fact from fabrication.

I recognized this issue early on in the pandemic when the numbers just didn’t add up and the media narrative didn’t make sense. The numbers I pulled from government sources and the scientific research I came across told a completely different story than what the mainstream media would report. As a former data analyst and someone with a knack for research, I took it upon myself to summarize all of my findings into bite-sized articles that broke down many of the complex concepts (PCR tests, excess mortality, virus isolation, government spending, etc.) into something digestible.

This is how Seven Days of Truth was born.

I was sitting on all of this important information but I had no way of getting it out to the public. Then it hit me. What if I wrote 7 articles that exposed the truth about covid-19? and presented the real narrative to the public? What if someone could simply text the word ‘truth’ to a special number and it would send them a different article every morning for 7 days, each filled with indisputable facts about covid-19. It would be like a daily dose of the truth to help people make an informed moral choice that’s based on facts and not media spin. Today I’m happy to announce that Seven Days of Truth is now a reality.

Ontario was locked down again today with small businesses closing their doors to in-store patrons, while big box stores with food remain open. Infectious disease specialist, Dr. Neil Rau, stated that “We already have grocery stores open. I think it is arbitrary to have closed small retailers.”

Government data shows retail stores, fitness centres and bars/restaurants/nightclubs each only accounted for about 1% of the 35,206 cases associated with outbreaks. More glaringly, each group only caused about 0.25% of all 169,411 cases in Ontario.

With an estimated 225,000 Canadian small businesses set to close by spring, why are governments continuing to enforce restrictive lockdowns that unfairly punish small businesses, allowing corporate box stores to earn record profits?

The Scarlet Letter Of Covid-19

By Todd Hayen, PhD

“Wearing a mask is an act of love.” I have about a dozen similar little snippets of wisdom collected over the recent weeks, as I am sure most of you have also witnessed if you are a frequent visitor to Facebook.

If wearing a mask is an act of love, what would not wearing a mask be an act of? I have often heard it directly referred to as an act of extreme selfishness, among other equally shaming descriptions. Early on, mask wearers described those they encountered who did not wear masks as “dismaying, confusing,” or “selfish”, these descriptions have now evolved to “hateful, moronic, disgusting,” or “unconscionable.” Wearing or not wearing a mask no longer seems to be a medical choice — something to ward off Covid-19 transmission, but it has become more of a social, or political, statement — a device to indicate “who is with us” and “who is against us.”

In 1850 Nathaniel Hawthorne’s novel The Scarlet Letter was published. The story was set in mid 17th Century puritanical Massachusetts and presented what is possibly one of the first tales of public shaming to come out of the Americas. A young woman in Boston has given birth to a child with no identified father. She is brought before the public and, through a decree brought down by the community authorities, is required to wear a scarlet letter “A” prominently displayed on her clothing whenever in public. The Scarlet Letter is meant to mark her as an adulteress, carrying all the shame and humiliation the designation “adulteress” would connote during that particular period of religious fundamentalism.

Humans, probably since the earliest of times, have always gravitated toward the identification of “other” in their culture — in primitive, less civilized times, certainly due to the potential danger of warring, or conflicting, tribes in close proximity. A fear of “other” has been etched in the collective unconscious, and we certainly have seen examples of this in our recent, and not so recent, history. However, differing from ancient times where close contact with a group of people who could very well hurt you in a variety of ways, today such a great threat does not generally exist; therefore, there is no real purpose behind identifying those who “don’t fit in,” yet we still are anxious to do so.

In Hawthorne’s The Scarlet Letter, Hester Prynne, the protagonist of the story, must be perceived as the enemy before she can be publicly shamed. Birthing an illegitimate child, or more precisely, engaging in the sexual act with a man she isn’t married to, goes against the religious mores of Prynne’s culture. There is, then, a weak appearance of “reason” to fear her otherness, and thus to then shame her, or to even hate her. She is marked due to her violation of a cultural, in this case also religious, standard of the time. She herself, however, is not shameful. Her shame is placed upon her due to an external doctrine. The reason to shame her becomes secondary to the idea that the people who are shaming are searching for “other,” compelled by a collective unconscious and archaic need to establish safety and control through the identification of the “unsafe” — the “other.” If you can identify them, then you can project hate and disgust on that individual or group, and thus feel a modicum of control — your immediate environment is a bit safer if you feel you have some control over it.

When applying this idea to the problem of wearing masks, and the identification of “unsafe other” to those who don’t wear masks, don’t mask wearers have a valid point in castigating that nonconforming group? If it is so clear, according to the mainstream narrative, that Covid-19 is spread predominantly by people who do not wear masks, why in the world would people choose to not wear a mask, and thus selfishly spread their disease to everyone they come in contact with? This supposition does not stand up to scrutiny for several reasons; the first and foremost is that not everyone has disease to spread. In order to transmit a disease, with or without a mask, you must first have it. This first problem is easily solved by the mainstream narrative’s efforts to make sure we understand that you don’t have to have symptoms to be a carrier of virus (some reports I have read say 45% of all disease is acquired by asymptomatic people, how they came to that conclusion is beyond my logic reasoning, but most people seem to believe this), thus everyone is then a potential carrier.

Regardless of what the mainstream media has to say, there certainly are people who don’t buy into their rhetoric, and quite possibly many non-conforming anti-maskers are among these people. Therefore, an anti-masker very likely may not be selfish at all. If they don’t believe they have the virus, then not wearing a mask won’t hurt anyone. But this question is never asked, and thus the noncompliant become identified and philosopher who lived in the early part of the 20th Century. Roughly, and simply speaking, “participation mystique” refers to a collective human compulsion to project an identity onto a group of people that is largely imaginative or symbolic. This is probably where a concept like “herd mentality” originates, or even a more common phrase we are hearing these days, “sheeple” — people who seem to blindly follow an official narrative. It also applies to “conspiracy theorists,” “tin foil hat wearers,” and in the context of this article, “selfish anti-maskers.”

This projection that Jung speaks of is generally unconscious, or at least the impetus for it is. What becomes the basis for fear, hate, disgust, or whatever other derogatory term and emotion that sputters forth when confronting the object of the projection is again unconscious and archaic in origin. It is all but universally clear that this projection of the “unsafe other” onto no-maskers is a result of the nefarious agenda of the “powers that be,” although if history is any validation of this probability, we certainly have many examples to support it. That being said, however the “powers that be” wish to manipulate their success, the method of their manipulation is supported by clear psychological tendencies that human beings have possessed probably since humans walked the earth: it is very easy for those in power to manipulate our mass psychology to their benefit. We of course must all strive to be more conscious, more aware of the powers that internally or externally, propel us into behaviour that is not only consciously irrational, but unproductive and ultimately quite dangerous.

as “unsafe other” — evil, selfish, moronic, idiotic, (fill in the blank). Thus they are a person who doesn’t care about anyone but themselves. They wear the scarlet letter “No Mask” and are then designated as the one to hate, the group to disown, the ones “not for, but against.” They become the group to, eventually, be destroyed. To the destroyers, for good reason. Never mind the disease, the good reason to destroy them is that they are in the group to hate, to fear, and they are easily marked — they are “other.”

The mask wearing phenomena is interesting on several counts; one is that it seems to be a completely artificial concoction. Another is the opposing idea that there is a good logical argument for wearing one. It does look like to many that there is a conscious manipulation of an archaic psychological complex (the innate fear of “different” deeply seated in a very old truth about the potential danger of neighboring tribes), i.e., “taking advantage of a psychological, although illogical, propensity” in order to push along the agenda of the manipulators — but who or what is the manipulator? We again have seen historically the manipulation of a populace to hate “other” that is fabricated by the state. The most obvious in recent years is the Nazi vilification of the Jews. Even more recently Muslim’s have been similarly targeted as “other to be feared” by the US Government. Mexicans and immigrants in general have been as well. Many people believe that other marginalized peoples, races, people of certain sexual orientations, other religious groups as well as women, have been purposely and maliciously marked as “other” by the state. The rationalization for this action generally comes under the insistence that it is for the “good of the people.” Therefore, the groups identified as dangerous are to be avoided, chastised, abused, shamed and even violently harmed for being the “enemy”.

The eminent Swiss psychiatrist Carl Jung made popular a phrase, “participation mystique,” which had already been invented by Lévy-Brühl, a French scholar

A Lesson In “Reverse” Psychology And Media Omission

By Richard Aylesworth

Our opinions of events in this life are often based on three things; observations, shared information and our assumptions. If any of the information we glean in this process is even partially incorrect or incomplete, it stands to reason that our personal opinions may also be less than accurate. When we place our faith in mass media to be our only source of diligent information, with no independent research, the potential for us to embrace misinformation or incomplete facts from that media source is always at play.

Growing up in a world of real life private investigators, my granddad and my father gave me a unique education. It was one that could never be taught in school at any level. While most kids my age were at home watching The Monkees on weekends, I was observing a great deal of real life monkey business with plot lines well beyond my years and that particular TV show. My classmates were still trying to get their heads around the unthinkable premise of where babies came from. I was on the road serving divorce papers for adultery, posing as an unsuspecting paper-boy.

The mark almost always opened the door to a 9 year old for their free yet very expensive “special edition”, compliments of a spousal plaintiff. This special delivery also brought about a litany of special reactions and language. Dad or granddad were always close by, and still are in spirit.

My youthful version of “media sorcery” and sleight of hand may have given people more than they bargained for. However, it was all based in the whole truth and complete facts. Unfortunately, the news being brought into our homes today on TV, online, via radio and even the newspaper is often less than complete. We live in a world where editorial narratives can be purchased, placed and projected just like ads for tampons or toothpaste.

In the USA, The Smith-Mundt Modernization Act (Obama 2012) is a law that actually allows for intentional staged, fake media events to be scripted, funded, produced, broadcast and reported as real news. Often this is done to advance a political agenda. That false narrative is then further re-enforced in the psyche of the masses by various means of repetition. These include even long term ongoing “special anniversary reports” to keep a monumental myth alive. Collective brainwashing of the masses is far from being a myth my friends.

There’s a reason shows like CSI, The First 48, Criminal Minds and even Cheaters are as popular as they are. People are also further intrigued by magical masters of deception like Penn & Teller practising their craft, and then providing the bonus reveal of “how it was done”. It truly shouldn’t surprise people that “media magic” uses many of the same elements; Highly paid performer(s), announcers, assistants, foils, shades, palms, distractions, decoys, focal misdirection and yes, even plants in the crowd known as crisis actors.

Sometimes, “info voids” or gaps in a news story or magic tricks are as important as the props, the plot and people themselves. Assumptions are led by narratives, and he who controls the narrative can control our very own “theatre of the mind”, and our minds themselves, when allowed to.

Let’s try a “for instance”... Let’s say that you likely have a strong opinion on a very sensational media case and famous criminal trial. Let’s say it involves; a celebrity movie star who’s also a football player, a double murder, a white Bronco, black gloves and its own 50 shades of “grey areas”, and many red herrings. Yet still your opinion based on the media narrative as provided, is solid. You just know it too. Look, the media wouldn’t lie and doesn’t miss a thing, do they?

Ok then, here’s a few strange questions that are only strange because you’ve never been given any context; — How do you feel about the use of Depakote? It’s an anti-rage medication that can cause blackouts when combined with alcohol. — Why would someone not punch out their time card at the end of their shift? — Have you ever been angered because someone didn’t show up for a special dinner that you’d prepared at great lengths?— Can deep-seated psychological issues result from the drowning death of a young sibling left in your care and return as episodes of psychotic rage later in life? — Does it really matter if there were yellow canine hairs on a black knit cap found at the scene?

In 1996, at the time of the infamous Nicole Simpson, Ron Goldman murders, Jason Lamar Simpson was a 23 yr. old young man. Much like O.J. he played college football but not at the calibre of his famous father. Like his grandfather though, Jason pursued a culinary

He headed for Nicole’s home and appears to have contacted O.J. to express his anger and that he was going to have words. At some point, O.J. himself changed his departure scheduled, and headed there as well.

Jason was allowed to enter Nicole’s locked courtyard and a heated discussion likely evolved very rapidly. A handsome waiter from Mezza Luna named Ron Goldman appeared, supposedly for the purposes of returning Nicole’s reading glasses that were left behind. A warm bubble bath, a bottle of wine and two glasses awaited in Nicole’s ensuite bathroom. At some point, Ron and Jason engaged in their own version of “Mortal Combat”. Jason was known to carry a Gerber Mk 1 style combat knife and Ron’s martial arts training was no match for Jason’s knife work. Ron was mortally wounded.

Nicole, a witness to this fatal battle was grabbed from behind and pummeled several times on the crown of her skull leaving distinctive lacerations. Her throat was then slashed all the way to her spinal column, leaving her nearly decapitated.

Enter O.J., just a tad late to make peace. The scene was a bloody mess likely causing him some queasiness. Unknown to many, he is actually very fearful of blood, a bonafide haemaphobe. Not likely someone to use a knife in a homicide. As well, his relationship with Nicole was friendly at the time and after they began living apart according to many friends.

O.J. caught a later flight to Chicago. Upon return, his most memorable drive home with a gun to his head was captured in the minds of millions forever. If his driver was going any slower they would have been in reverse. In reality O.J. was actually running a reverse. It was the most important play of his life. Not to win a game but to keep all eyes off the actual “ball carrier”.

Yepppp! Jason moved to Florida after the trial. The contents of his storage locker were later purchased at auction due to non- payment of rent. Included were his Jeep, some very incriminating diaries and photographs. Most compelling was a Gerber Mk1 style fighting knife. Its blade size and profile matched the wound cavities in both Nicole and Ron’s bodies. The pommel edges matched Nicole’s scalp wounds exactly.

Throughout the entire arrest, trial and investigation, Jason was never formally questioned. He was in fact totally overlooked. LAPD proudly kept a display of many items and photos related to the case. One such exhibit was a black knit watch cap that held hairs from an African American male of a similar but not exact match to O.J. ’s DNA . It also held the hairs of a yellow haired canine. When a photo of Jason wearing a black watch cap with his golden haired dog appeared, LAPD immediately removed the cap from their display.

Information shared here is available through the writings of Dallas based private investigator Wm. Dear including his book, O.J.is Innocent (of murder) and I can prove it.

career as a chef and worked at Jacksons Restaurant in LA. At the time of the murders, Jason was also on probation for two assaults at knife point. One upon an ex-girlfriend, and one upon an ex-boss. In the case of the girlfriend, she was thrown into an empty bathtub and savagely beaten as he then cut off her hair with a knife. Jason had been clinically diagnosed with intermittent rage disorder and was prescribed the drug Depakote.

O.J. was scheduled to depart for a speaking appearance in Chicago after attending a school recital involving Sydney and Justin, OJ’s two youngest children with Nicole. The whole extended family was there. Sunday nights at Jacksons Restaurant, Jason was the head chef. He took a great deal of time and pride preparing a very special meal planned for his family’s post recital dinner party.

Uh oh, a no show. Apparently with no notice either. Followers of the epic trial know that Nicole and the family entourage dined at Mezza Luna that night and not Jacksons. Staff at Jacksons later noted that Jason was fuming angry, very agitated, downed a few drinks and stormed out without punching out.

Absurdity Observer

A List Of Some Of The Most Absurd Things That Have Happened In Recent Weeks!

- Masks are now mandatory when using drive-throughs in the province of New Brunswick.
- Vancouver anti-lockdown activist Ryan Kulbaba was denied a flight from Vancouver to Toronto out of fears he might take off his mask and spread “misinformation” on board.
- 21-year-old Ocean Wiesblatt of Calgary was beaten and arrested by threat of a taser for “violating public health orders” by playing ice hockey at an outdoor rink. According to the Alberta government website: “Outdoor team sports must also be limited to 10 people or fewer and 2 metre distancing must be maintained at all times.” There were 15 people on the ice playing hockey when the officers arrived to the scene of the “crime.”
- Young children in Saskatchewan are now signing Canada’s nation anthem in American Sign Language because, at least in some schools, they are no longer allowed to sing due to COVID-19 fears (even though they are also required to wear masks.)
- An “uncooperative” 2-year-old was kicked off of a United Airlines flight for not wearing a mask (despite her father offering to hold his hand over her face the entire ride.) Her and her family are now “banned for life” by the airline for “not complying.”
- Residents of Quebec’s “red zones” received an emergency broadcast on their phones saying: “Public Health Emergency in effect. All public and private gatherings remain prohibited in red zones and participants are subject to fines without notice. Police presence has been increased. You are asked to comply with public health instructions.”
- Justin Trudeau’s half-brother, Kyle Kemper, spoke out stating that he believes a “global corporatocracy” has taken advantage of the COVID-19 crisis to diminish democracy and tighten control over people’s lives.
- Calgary has announced masks are mandated until December 2021. Individuals are be threatened with fines of $100 for their 1st offence of failing to comply, $200 for 2nd, $300 for 3rd... and so on.
- Ontario’s Chief Medical Officer of Health Dr. Barbara Yaffe was caught on a hot mic saying “I don’t know why I bring these papers. I never look at them. I just say whatever they write down for me.” Dr. Yaffe was the same doctor who stirred controversy in the summer when she said, “you’ll get false positives almost half the time” when testing a population with low levels of COVID-19.
- A Vancouver paralympic athlete, born without arms, was kicked out of a local Indigo Chapters and was threatened to have the police called on her after she entered the store without a mask.
- Toronto Emergency Physician Dr. Gil Nimni tweeted “I can’t help but shake my head tonight. I just finished my shift at the COVID-19 Assessment Centre at my hospital. I Decided to walk through my ER on the way to the change room – EMPTY! I shake my heads at my colleagues who go on Twitter and TV ranting about how our ER is crazy.” In a radio interview after the tweet, Dr. Nimni said he believes he is part of a silent majority in his profession who believe mainstream media is misrepresenting this situation.
- Windsor, Ontario Pastor faces up to $100,000 fine and a year in jail for holding a worship service days before Christmas.
- Paediatrician Dr. Paul Thomas, who published a landmark study that compared vaccinated children to unvaccinated children had his medical licence suspended 5 days after the study was released. Study indicates children who were vaccinated show an elevated rate of medical conditions ranging from respiratory infections to ADHD. Must-see interview can be found on The Highwire with Del Bigtree.
- The WHO rewrites the definition of “herd immunity” on their website from “when a population is immune either through vaccination or immunity developed through previous infection” to “a concept used for vaccination in which a population can be protected from a certain virus if a threshold is reached. Herd Immunity is achieved by protecting people from a virus, not exposing them to it.”

- After publicly urging Americans in the days leading up to Thanksgiving to limit gatherings to “your immediate household,” White House COVID response co-ordinator Deborah Birx was caught breaking her own travel guidance rules. Birx masklessly celebrated thanksgiving with all four generations of her family at one of her vacation properties on Fenwick Island in Delaware.
- Americans for Tax Fairness report shows U.S. billionaires have raked in another 1 trillion dollars (which is one-third of their total net-worth) since the beginning of the pandemic. These 651 US billionaires could collectively provide a $3000 stimulus payment to every men, woman, and child in America and still be richer than they were 9 months ago.
